An invitation to travel

Le Royal Monceau - Raffles Paris is a project which has made real a dream of creating somewhere different: somewhere nourished with its own history and vibrations, as well as with Paris; a sentimental space woven from encounters, sensations and emotions, inhabited by the French spirit, impregnated with culture, and dedicated to the sole genuine elegance – that of the heart.

It all started with the desire to remodel the classic codes of luxury hotels and so project them into a new dimension. But the project also derives from an affirmation of a slightly insane, infinitely poetic determination to break with custom, to steer clear of the apparently inevitable, to welcome the unusual, and to declare a tenderness for panache and impertinence, for fantasy and excess, while still cherishing rigour and perfection.

This desire embodies a je ne sais quoi, a spirit that some have called the French Revolution, others the French Touch, a happy synthesis of movements and influences, of grace and authenticity, of fidelity and critical acumen. As a luxury hotel from the roaring Twenties, a rendez-vous for artists and writers, as well as for gentlemen and adventurers, Le Royal Monceau – Raffles Paris has always embodied “Parisian elegance” in all of its spontaneity, culture and sagacity. It still remains a rendez-vous for those who are not afraid of their own era and instead provoke improbable encounters, those who savour “lost time”, the white magic of unexpected moments and that sweet melancholy which seizes us as soon as we leave behind the helter-skelter of our daily existences.

In the words of Philippe Starck, who has entirely reimagined Le Royal Monceau – Raffles Paris: “A hotel is intrinsically pointless, it is just a shelter for people, who deserve our attention, generosity and consideration”. It is for this reason that art and culture, beauty and creation have been given a presence which is so original, dominant and genuine.

This can be seen everywhere: in the layout of the spaces, in the furnishings or in the service. Not forgetting the atmosphere. Here, creativity is offered up quite openly, as an invitation to travellers to experience something memorable. People come to Le Royal Monceau - Raffles Paris to live out their lives, or else a different life, borne up by the spirit of the place, transported by a shared elan, a light, imperceptible pulsation, which can never be forgotten. Here, everyone can find what suits them, between intimacy and sharing, between effervescence and rest, according to their desires, their mood or the moment of the day.

Le Royal Monceau – Raffles Paris is not just somewhere to be passed through, but for staying, because it creates the singular sensation of being both at home and away, with familiar faces and yet among strangers, as both host and guest, in a constantly seething mix of culture, creation and emotion.

“A hotel is intrinsically pointless, it is just a shelter for people, who deserve our attention, generosity and consideration”

Philippe Starck
Paris, August 2nd 1928: there has been a heatwave for the past week. By nine o’clock, the capital is beginning to melt into the haze. In front of 37 Avenue Hoche, a man is pacing about, seeking out the coolness of the plane trees that border the service road beside the avenue; he then turns and gazes at the discreetly monumental façade, elegant high windows and smooth line of the awning. The man is Pierre Bermond and the hotel is the Royal Monceau, which opened the previous day. Another man now emerges from it, hails the doormen and porters, then walks over to join him. This is his associate, André Jugnot.

After founding the Miramar Hotels in Biarritz and Cannes, several hotels in Evian, and the Carlton and California Hotels in Paris, here they now are on this peaceful, sumptuous avenue, shunned by the trams and buses, which still rustles with the trotting of the horses that drove Anatole France to Madame Arman de Caillavet’s literary salon.

Pierre Bermond walks down the avenue, which is soon to be overwhelmed by the sun. Before setting up his hotel group, he was born in Nice, then studied to become a lawyer in Aix-en-Provence and thus knows how to negotiate with the heat: economise your movements, gather every breath of air, seek out the shadows of the trees. Did he not provide the Royal Monceau hotel with a spacious garden, the only one of its kind in Paris? Though, it is true, the 8th arrondissement did lend itself to this purpose...

In the 18th century, this area of Paris was still the countryside, dotted with isolated villages and hamlets. It was here, just by the village of Monceau, that the Duke of Chartres decided to establish a park of eight hectares in 1773. He entrusted this project to Louis Carrogis, or ‘Carmontelle’, a playwright, revel-maker and avant-garde landscape designer, who devised an Anglo-Chinese style garden, decked with a multitude of miniature buildings, or ‘follies’.

Amid the woods, along the spacious lawns, and in the flowerbeds or lakes could be found a Dutch windmill, a minaret, Chinese bridges, an obelisk, a pyramid, a grotto, a medieval castle... This theatrical set, in which everything has been planned for amusement, was the scene of sumptuous festivities until 1792, when the Duke of Chartres, now Philippe Égalité, gave it over to the Republic. After a dark period, during which it fell into disuse and then was cut in half, the Duke of Chartres’s folly became the property of the city of Paris in 1860. It was then renovated by Baron Haussmann and renamed Parc Monceau.

Thanks to its fantastical landscaping, Parc Monceau helped to make follies fashionable. So it was that, in 1775, Nicolas Beaujon acquired a dozen hectares next to the Butte de l’Étoile, where he established a quite extraordinarily sumptuous property.
It was progressively sold off in lots after its owner’s death until, at the beginning of the 19th century, it became the Beaujon quarter, attracting artists and writers: Théophile Gautier lived there with his ponies, Arsène Houssaye had a Gothic manor built there, surrounded by a garden of vines. Rosa Bonheur made it her home for a time...

It was at this time that the redesigning of Place de l’Étoile was commanded by imperial decree. In 1844, Boulevard Monceau was opened, which was then renamed Avenue de la Reine Hortense before receiving the name of a revolutionary general, Lazare Hoche, in 1879. Avenue Hoche was skirted by sumptuous buildings and town houses, boasting among its residents the parents of the future Anna de Noailles, Basil Zaharoff the adventurer and arms dealer, as well as Albert and Léontine Arman de Caillavet, famous for their literary salons.

A little further up towards Place de l’Étoile, a spacious property contained a retirement home belonging to an order of nuns. After the First World War, it was purchased by the hotel group belonging to Pierre Bermond and André Jugnot.

While the gardens were preserved, the buildings gave way to an elegant construction of harmonious proportions: the Royal Monceau hotel. It was designed by the architect Louis Duhaton who, along with his associates Charles Lefebvre and Marcel Julien, also created Les Arcades du Lido on the Champs-Élysées, among other luxury addresses.

As soon as it was opened in 1928, the Royal Monceau hotel became a rendez-vous of choice for artists and intellectuals. Its worldwide clientele appreciated its gardens, its spacious bar, its gaming rooms for bridge, table tennis, or billiards and... its barbershop. Everything had been thought out to provide luxury, calm and modernity: its 264 rooms, its Appartement Royal and its suites contained the most recent appliances, while the service was attentive and discreet and its restaurant became a gastronomic delight. As for the private salons, they were to witness historic events, beginning with the social and economic hum at the start of the 3rd French Republic.

So it was that players on the political scene would run into Josephine Baker, or else Maurice Chevalier, Ernest Hemingway and Mistinguett. It was an era of exuberance, glamour and liberty. The Dadaists, then the Surrealists, proclaimed the kingdom of the imagination. Parisian nights echoed with jazz; theatres and cinemas prospered. Malraux published Les Conquérants, Marcel Pagnol directed Topaze and Maurice Ravel composed Boléro, while Gabrielle Chanel was imposing her own form of modernity.

Having been requisitioned during the Second World War, the Royal Monceau hotel regained its independence in 1945 – in particular, it entertained General Eisenhower, Field Marshal Montgomery and the allied high command – before resuming its activities the following year. In 1947, Ho Chi Minh spent seven weeks there during the Fontainebleau Conference, which was to determine the future of Franco-Vietnamese relations; then, in May 1948, David Ben Gourion and Golda Meir signed the birth certificate of the State of Israel on its premises.

Prestigious guests came, returned and met up: Joseph Kessel, Walt Disney, the Maharajahs of Indore and Kashmir, King Farouk of Egypt, the Aga Khan... In their footsteps would later come Michael Jackson, Madonna, Robert de Niro, Lou Reed and Sofia Coppola.

Over the years, while remaining a rendezvous for Parisians and a select address for travellers from all over the world, the Royal Monceau hotel started to slumber.
To sleep, to dream, to share... and live

This is the place. Here, where the awning above the majestic entrance sheds a ruby-coloured light, while the porters, bellboys and doormen welcome travellers, opening the doors to those who, for one night or, perhaps, for several years, will make this place their “home”. As a delightful step in a journey or trip, for a rendez-vous or when out roaming, arriving at the Le Royal Monceau means starting quite naturally in the intimacy of La Réception, which Philippe Starck – who has rethought the entire hotel – has conceived as a reunion or return to a family house, to a “home”, with a promise of peace, rich with fertile surprises.

This gentle antechamber then opens out into the lobby. It appears as a huge central aisle punctuated with little private salons and tiny display cases; it seems full of sentimental, familial chaos, in which any attempt at order is instantly overthrown by the shades or traces of travels: a Siberian knickknack, an Italian vase, a work of art...

Its three hundred square metres lead to the historic, monumental staircase – multiplied endlessly by a play of mirrors reflecting Le Royal Monceau’s collection of chandeliers, grouped into clusters – which echoes with a half forgotten melody as it rises to the upper floors and intimacy of the bedrooms, suites and private apartments.

A room of one’s own, to sleep, perchance to dream.

And to live. After the effervescence of the public areas on the ground floor – which can be returned to later for exploration – now comes a secret serenity favouring abandon. The bed occupies stage centre.

In a unison mingling the exacting elegance of the 40s and 50s – rigorous lines, fine materials, warm colours – with the poetry of sensitive details, each of the eighty-five Rooms seems full of a life and a history which its occupants, no matter how long or short their stay, are invited to extend: books placed here and there on the shelves, a light-shade decked with a sketch, a shell of Murano blown glass, party photos leant against a wall, a signed acoustic guitar, love letters left in the drawer of a desk - which has itself been drawn up beside the bed so as to allow for midnight jottings – a scarf, a pearl necklace... they are all traces of a traveller besotted with the wild blue yonder, or of a dandy, a woman of letters, an artist or passionate collector.

This history continues in the stone, steel and glass world of the bathroom, a celebration of extreme cleanliness in which lurks a painting, or photos stuck behind a mirror... Finally, the dressing room, in an allusion to the fitting-rooms of haute couture, reveals a succession of mirrors and neoclassical furnishings in a shadowless light. Such is the layout of these rooms which seem to be whispering how life, real, beautiful, nonchalant, pulsating life in all its lightness, is possible quite simply only in Paris.

Conceived in the same spirit, the sixty-four Suites are fully-fledged private territories, or staging posts for the world’s wanderers and artists, providing them not only with a space to work but also an inspiring environment, bearing the memories of all their predecessors.

For example, Suite 714 where Ray Charles once lived, now bears his name and contains photographs by Arlette Kotchounian who wrote The Sun Died essentially for him. The three Presidential Suites provide the advantages of a private dwelling, while at the same time offering all of the hotel’s services.
4. Privé, our collection of spectacular private suites

Privé lives up to its name. The best private address in Paris. Wonderfully elegant and luxurious, yet understated and very welcoming.

Behind a discreet entrance on the chic avenue Hoche, next to Le Royal Monceau – Raffles Paris, is a collection of heavenly suites, including three spectacular 350sqm Presidential Suites. Each one is designed as an exclusive private residence, with levels of service worthy of a great private house.

Set over five floors, these beautifully sophisticated, flexible suites offer their guests not only the services of the most exciting hotel in the city, but also private and secure entry through 41 avenue Hoche, and direct access to the hotel’s idyllic Spa My Blend by Clarins.

The largest suites also have a private hammam and gym (with a personal trainer) and a home cinema with next-generation technology. A sublimely skilled and creative florist is on hand to make the wildest of floral dreams come true. And – the ultimate of luxuries – a chef who will interpret the culinary desires of every guest, day or night, to create unforgettable meals.

Original architectural features are brilliantly blended with contemporary French design and individual character. For business trips, multi-generational travel, shopping sprees, or romantic interludes, Privé’s suites offer a winning combination of the discretion and space of a private apartment, underpinned by the comforts of a 5-star hotel. This is the height of Parisian luxury.

The Terrace

The terrace is a leafy haven at the heart of the Le Royal Monceau - Raffles Paris - a world away from the hustle and bustle of the chic Avenue Hoche. It is the perfect setting to enjoy the first rays of spring sun and people-watching, in the calm of a garden in bloom (weather permitting).

Tables from restaurants La Cuisine and Il Carpaccio spill out softly to share this jewel of a space. The doors of Le Bar Long open here to create a unique blend of activity and tranquil chatter throughout the day. Guests can enjoy a delectable lunch, sip a smooth coffee, or delight in an exquisite Pierre Hermé patisserie, al fresco.

The terrace flourishes and transforms throughout the day and the seasons. The huge teapot by the artist Joana Vasconcelos adds an additional touch of magic to the site. Benches surround the pond in the middle of the garden. Deep within it, you can see the water moving in the spa swimming pool below.

Le Bar Long

A place to meet and talk, this bar is an unusual spot – its structure is broken up by large white linen curtains, works of art and a surprising collection of lamps and chandeliers. Located at the heart of the hotel, Le Bar Long is a high, long, narrow and luminous bar. For this space, designer Philippe Starck wanted to break with convention, the repetitive face-to-face layout between patrons and a bartender moving behind a bar. This is a place where people stop, talk, read and enjoy the great classics of luxury hotel bars or chic tapas, all served with original cocktails.

Open Tuesday to Saturday: 8:30 am to 2 am;
Sunday and Monday: 8:30 am to 12:30 am

Breakfast: 8:30am to 12pm
Snacks: 12pm to 6pm
Afternoon tea: 3pm to 6pm
Tapas: 6pm to 11pm
Lunch, afternoon tea, aperitif and dinner in the garden during warm weather.

La Cuisine

La Cuisine welcomes guests for its award-winning breakfast and renowned Brunches.

Every morning, the Parisian palace offers a delicious buffet with carefully selected products. Tasty creations are prepared on-site daily by Pierre Hermé Paris and guests can enjoy organic eggs, muesli, selections from Eric Kayser’s bakery, organic tea, freshly-squeezed fruit juice, gluten-free selections... The brunches are gourmet adventures, elevated with select products from talented and passionate craftsmen, including a vast selection of desserts by world-renowned Pastry Chef Pierre Hermé. Every Saturday during brunch, the most artistic Parisian palace offers creative and playful activities for its youngest guests.

Open daily:
Breakfast: 7am to 10:30am
Saturday brunch: 12pm to 3:30pm (89 € / pers)
Royal brunch on Sunday: 12pm to 3:30pm (126 € / pers)
With cigar smoking and humidors right back in vogue, it’s no surprise that the ever-chic Le Royal Monceau, Raffles Paris has opened a private club.

Deeply comfortable, with bespoke leather club armchairs, art books and international magazines, this jewel-like retreat is dedicated to the delights of the Havana and the Montecristo.

This is a sanctuary for the happy few, where they can while away the hours with like-minded aficionados... This is a place where serious issues of the day are discussed, the world is put to rights and smoke-wreathed moments of calm are savoured. For fine days, there is a members-only private terrace, accessible directly from Le Club Viñales.

Membership will be strictly restricted. When they join, each member will be given a key for their own private humidor where their cigar collection will be stored and preserved. And over the first few months of their membership they will be recognized with exclusive gifts: accessories from the iconic French company ST Dupont, famed for its lighters and leather goods, as well fine cognac and whiskies.

Other advantages include an exclusive concierge service, made-to-order cocktails behind closed doors and invitations, with a guest, to private tastings, conducted by such great names as Dom Perignon, Hennessy, Louis XIII and Glenfiddich. They will also be entitled to additional benefits when using the hotel’s restaurants and guestrooms. Le Club Viñales – a private enclave, deep in Le Royal Monceau - Raffles Paris, for connoisseurs and aficionados, the latest chapter in the story of this show-stopping hotel.

Le Club Viñales, a private enclave for cigar aficionados
When it reopened in October 2010, Le Royal Monceau – Raffles Paris developed an elaborate cultural policy, offering customers a range of cultural options including an art bookstore dedicated to contemporary art, a modern cinema, a contemporary art gallery, a private collection of over 300 works of art and a cultural service run by our Art Concierge. The artistic program of the hotel is multidisciplinary, multimedia and intergenerational.

The art concierge and her blog

Le Royal Monceau – Raffles Paris offers a unique service: an Art Concierge. Our cultural mediator Julie Eugène guides and advises our guests as they visit Paris, keeping them posted on current art news and devising tailor-made plans. She can also offer customized visits of the hotel’s private collection.

What is an Art Concierge? Designed by Philippe Starck, the Art Concierge role is essentially an advisory role and a cultural mediator with the clients as well as the staff. The Art Concierge is there to answer any inquiries regarding art and culture.

The creation of this new service in a luxury hotel in Paris is a world first, and covers three aspects: the implementation of art exhibitions at the Royal Monceau Raffles Paris Art District gallery, the production of editorial content for the site www.artforbreakfast.com, and services to customers such as: museums visits, guided tours of an exhibition by the curator, visiting artist studios, art galleries or private collections, private viewing of special pieces, private guitar lessons, cultural activities for children, cultural tour in Paris guided by an art concierge, etc.

Open Tuesday to Saturday, 11am to 7pm

Art District, the art gallery

This exhibition area is the hub of the artistic and cultural life of the hotel. A new venture into the world of contemporary art in Paris, Art District welcomes artists, art connoisseurs and collectors, patrons and art professionals. The space is dedicated to premiere exhibitions in Paris: retrospectives, commissions for Le Royal Monceau, presentation of new or previously unseen collections.

Free entrance - Tel: +33 (0)1 42 99 98 81
Open Tuesday to Saturday, 11am to 7pm
Art bookstore ‘La Librairie des Arts’

The leading contemporary art bookstore in a Parisian luxury hotel, La Librairie des Arts is an emblematic element of art and culture at the hotel. Echoing its art program and worldwide cultural current events, the bookstore has over 700 titles as well as objects by artists and architects, limited editions and various unusual formats. Yet another place to meet and share, La Librairie des Arts has a wide selection of works, constantly updated.

Open Monday to Friday, 10am to 7pm
Saturday and Sunday, 11:30am to 7pm
Tel: +33 (0)1 42 99 88 84

Private Art Collection

Works from the collection of Le Royal Monceau - Raffles Paris are exhibited in each of the hotel rooms and suites, as well as in the public areas and the garden. The creation of this collection for the rooms and suites represents a major investment, notably in fine-art photography, with such artists as Simon Chaput, Koichiro Doi, Guy Le Querrec, Lucien Hervé, Rune Guneriussen, Thierry Dreyfus, Harry Gruyaert and Marie Maillard. One suite is decorated with a series of portraits by Arlette Kotchounian of Ray Charles, once a familiar face at the hotel. A view of the hotel interpreted by hyper-photographer Jean-François Rauzier hangs in Suite 34. The works of art exhibited in the public areas were all commissioned specially for the hotel from international artists. Stéphane Calais’ fresque murals, Jardin à la Française, adorns the ceiling of the restaurant Matsuhisa Paris. Rosson Crow and his her Grand Salon, Maison d’Alsace, 1929, hangs in the VIP room of the restaurant Il Carpaccio. Craftsman Thomas Boog also worked on the decor of the Italian restaurant, creating a fresco of hand-glued shells. On the first landing, the impressive Salle des Trophées by Russian artist Nikolay Polissky consists of an installation of 15 life-size wooden elk and deer. English artist Stephen Smith designed the mirrors on the each of the hotel’s landings. A monumental teapot by Joana Vasconcelos sits in the hotel’s garden.

The Katara Cinema

Le Royal Monceau – Raffles Paris innovates in the world of the Parisian luxury hotels. With its own integrated movie theater, the hotel intends to keep Paris on the front line for major international film premieres, creating an institution, a one-step meeting place and venue for international actors, directors, writers, producers and promoters alike.

The Katara Cinema is the first class 99-seat theater, with integrated state-of-the-art sound and projection equipment in 35 mm, digital and 3D. A comprehensive team of screening and audio professionals, unique in the luxury hotel industry, are on-hand throughout the event.

The screening room is also available for hotel guests to organize private screenings, to watch auctions, to broadcast concerts or to organize seminars. The Katara Cinema is also one of the key elements in regards to the presence of art and culture in the hotel. Tailored event programming will celebrate the seventh art through exclusive and high-end rendezvous.
